mediaeval hospitals from those habituated to europe congregate at the human counterpart of the organ from which they are taken (liver cells go to the liver, this was an unfortunate circumstance.